

Laura Lepschy taught at the Universities of Bristol and Reading before moving to University College London. She is also honorary Research Fellow of the University of Cambridge and honorary Fellow of Somerville College Oxford. She has written on the history of taste, with particular focus on Venetian painting. She has published "Tintoretto Observed" (Longo, Ravenna, 1983), which was expanded in an Italian version "Davanti a Tintoretto" (Marsilio, Venice, 1988). She continues to work on the history of Venetian guide-books and travel accounts. She has also published on various aspects of Italian literature of all periods and is co-author with Giulio Lepschy of "The Italian Language Today".